Course Overview

In most developing countries the majority of the population-the rural population especially-does not receive even the most basic health care or any nutritional advice. Malnutrition usually stems from poverty and from ignorance of what are the right foods to eat. At the same time it increases the problems caused by the lack of health care because it weakens the body's defense against disease. This training is aimed at building the skills of the participants to efficiently offer nutrition services to communities, linking them to care and referral. This is expected to empower communities to make informed choices to ensure healthy eating and lifestyles.

Course Outcomes

- Integrate concepts from behavioral, biological and natural sciences, with emphasis on epidemiology and global perspectives, in order to review the needs of communities and diverse populations.
- Evaluate epidemiological research and apply findings to community oriented nursing practice in order to explain the control of communicable disease.
- Explain the relationship between the environment and human health and disease.
- Examine the role of the nurse and discuss appropriate nursing interventions that promote and maintain the health of children.
- Evaluate strategies that can be used by public and community health nurses to improve the health status and eliminate health disparities of vulnerable populations.
- Evaluate how disasters effect persons, families and their communities.
- Identify the multidimensional influences on aging and how these effect the health status of older adults.
- Describe nursing roles that meet the emerging health needs of individuals, families, communities and populations.
- Describe school health services and coordinated occupational health programs.
- Discuss trends in lifestyles that will affect the health of communities and the future challenges for nursing.
